ORDER OF PUBLICATION

In the Circuit Court of Buchanan County, Missouri, to the October Term, A. D. 1921.

State of Missouri, County of Buchanan, ss.
Robert Coy Plaintiff
vs.
Georgia Coy Defendant.

Now at this day comes the plaintiff by his attorney, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the Circuit Court that said defendant, Georgia Coy, is a non-resident of the State of Missouri, and does not reside therein, it is ordered that said non-resident defendant be notified by publication, as required by law, that said plaintiff has commenced her suit in this Court against said defendant by petition and affidavit, the object and general nature of which is to obtain a decree of divorce from the defendant on the grounds of abandonment and desertion, without a just or reasonable cause for the space of one whole year next before the filing of plaintiff's petition, and has ever since remained away from plaintiff without a just or reasonable cause and against the will of plaintiff. That unless the said Georgia Coy shall be and appear at the next term of this Court, to be begun and held at the Court House, in the City of St. Joseph, in Buchanan County, State of Missouri, on the 3rd day of October, 1921, on or before the third day of said term, to answer plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken for confessed as to her and judgment rendered accordingly.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published in The St. Joseph Observer, a newspaper published in the County of Buchanan, for four weeks successively, the last insertion of which to be at least fifteen days before the next October, 1921, term of this Court.

Temie Winkler Plaintiff

Henry Winkler Defendant.

Now at this day comes the plaintiff by her attorney, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in vacation that said defendant, Henry Winkler, is a non-resident of the State of Missouri, and does not reside therein, it is ordered that said non-resident defendant be notified by publication, as required by law, that said plaintiff has commenced her suit in this Court against said defendant by petition and affidavit, the object and general nature of which is to obtain a decree of divorce from the defendant on the grounds of indignity such as to render her condition in life as the wife of the defendant intolerable, in that defendant was cross, disagreeable and abusive to plaintiff; that defendant failed to provide the necessities of life for plaintiff and his infant child; that defendant abandoned plaintiff and has absented himself without a reasonable cause for the space of one whole year next before the filing of plaintiff's petition; that defendant is a fugitive from justice. That unless the said defendant, Henry Winkler, shall be and appear at the next term of this Court, to be begun and held at the Court House, in the City of St. Joseph, in Buchanan County, State of Missouri, on the 3rd day of October, 1921, on or before the third day of said term, to answer plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken for confessed as to him and judgment rendered accordingly.

COLOSSAL CARRIER OF THE NORTH NOW HAS A NEW HOME IN NEW YORK

Because of the importance of transportation problems on both sides of the northern international boundary the consolidation of the Canadian Pacific's New York representation, with the sole office of the freight department, in the new twenty-one story Canadian Pacific Building, is regarded in transportation circles as a move of world-wide moment. Two floors of space in the great building, one block from the Grand Central Terminal, have been leased for twenty-one years at a rental of about $3,000,000.

The story of the Canadian Pacific is one of the great romances of big business. Sixty years ago Captain Palliser, who had crossed the Canadian Rockies after suffering great hardships, declared that a railway could not be built through them. Beginning in 1871, the Canadian government devoted nine years to the selection of a route and then turned the titanic task over to the Canadian Pacific. Overcoming apparently insurmountable difficulties, physical and financial, George Stephen, Donald Smith and William Van Horne built the railway through the mountain wilderness joining eastern and western Canada together with bands of steel in only five years.

Forty years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway was a dream. Today it has a trackage of 19,500 miles, 5,500 miles of which are in the United States. Fleets of steamships which span the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, the Great Lakes and the waterways to Alaska and the Alaskan coast, the Dominion of New Brunswick to British Columbia. It employs nearly 100,000 men; its first train bridge the vast 2,285 mile stretch between Montreal and Vancouver in only 92 hours, and its assets total more than a billion of dollars. During four years of war its ships steamed across the seas carrying 1,000,000 troops and war passengers.

George Stephen, afterwards Lord Mount Stephen, was first president of the company. He and his cousin George A. Smith, afterwards Lord Strathcona, were natives of Scotland. Sir William Van Horne, the master builder of the railway and its second president, was a native of the United States. So was Lord Shaughnessy, the railway genius who succeeded him and who is still chairman of the company. E. W. Bentley, its fourth president, is a native-born Canadian.

IT IS STILL A GREAT BIG UNSOLVED PROBLEM

PROHIBITION IS NO NEARER A SOLUTION THAN IT WAS YEARS AGO

IS NOT ACCOMPLISHED BY EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Never Before in the History of the United States Has There Been So Much Crime and Such a General and Redneck Contempt and Failure to Observe the Laws Now On the Statute Books or a Greater Number of People Now Incarcerated in Penal Establishments or in the Insane Asylums of the Country in General.

The glowing promises that with the advent of prohibition the wicked would cease from troubling and the weary be at rest have not been fulfilled.

Nebraska has been "dry" for more than four years. The whole country has been "dry" for nearly a year and a half.

It is not the fault of prohibition that the penitentiaries are taxed to capacity and the tax rate is higher than it ever was, but we can't help remembering that lower taxes and diminishing crime and empty jails were among the good things that were to follow in prohibition's wake.

One good thing prohibition is in a fair way to accomplish. From all except a few of the wettest spots on the map the open saloon has disappeared. This result the law has brought about because public sentiment backs up the law. Any law with a preponderant majority behind it can and will be enforced within reasonable bounds.

And Saloons Should Go

It has been found fairly easy to banish the saloon. It is found increasingly difficult to banish alcohol. The home brewer and distiller, the moonshiner, bootlegger and blockade runner, persist. As was said in congress, in the course of the discussion of the bill to "tighten up" prohibition enforcement: "The demand for liquor exists today, and so long as it does, it will be supplied by one means or another." People have been made to see that they have no right to the saloon. They have not been made to see that they have no right to procure liquor to drink in their own homes. Public sentiment does not accept or back up this portion of the law, even though it is written into the constitution of the United States. There is no healthy and resolute public opinion to visit disgrace upon known violators of this inhibition.

Representative Kahn of California put his finger on a sore spot when he said: "There are members here who vote for prohibition and who drink more liquor in a week than I do in a year."

The fact is notorious, outside congress as well as inside. In every community there were all too many anxious to vote prohibition on the other fellow, but not ready, and now refusing, to accept it as applying to themselves.

Brought Into Disrepute

The result has been to bring not alone the law but the constitution itself into disrepute. In its first stages, whatever may come later, bone dry prohibition has been a breeder of lawlessness and of loss of respect for law. It is a question open to debate whether this evil be not as great and menacing as the admitted evil that prohibition was designed to remedy. Not merely disrepute and disreputable people but those of the highest respectability, crowned with the highest honors, charged with the most solemn responsibilities of government, are now numbered among the habitually lawless. Hypocrisy has thrown off its shielding robes and become a brazen commonplace.

Already it can be said, from the test of a very short experience, that public opinion will accept the closing of the public drinking places. It is too early to say, on the basis of experience, that it cannot be brought to accept the rule against private drinking, merely because it has not as yet accepted it. Perhaps a campaign of education, conducted through two or three generations, may bring about a change of sentiment as to the rules that may properly govern personal conduct.

If Not—It Should

Obviously the campaign to banish alcohol as one of the dread curses of the race did not end with the adoption of the Eighteenth amendment. It has only just begun. Prohibition by law, as the alternative to regulation by law, has yet to prove itself. That is why congress is still making laws on the subject.

And it is locally interesting to observe that Omaha's congressman, Mr. Jeffries, voted against the bill to prohibit the use of wine and beer for medicinal purposes and otherwise to strengthen the Volstead enforcement act. Will the fact that he is a republican, though off the reservation, suffice to protect him from the unsparing wrath of Omaha's political pulpites?—Omaha World-Herald.

FED HIM SLOGANS

The Bankers at the Harding Dinner Give President Curious Advice.

That meeting of President Harding last week with the bankers of the West and South was a curious piece of business. We learn from reports of the dinner conference that "the slogan which the bankers impressed upon the president was that the United States can best right the world by righting itself."

This is like saying that the best way to right the export markets of the United States is to right the home markets, which need righting only because the export markets need righting. In ability to put the cart before the horse western and southern bankers at dinner in the White House cannot easily be surpassed.

These bankers have locally been called upon to finance the cotton growers, to finance the wool and wheat growers, all with large unsold stocks on hand, to prevent the forced liquidation of these stocks and to assure them along against a time when they can be liquidated either to some advantage or without ruinous losses. And when is that time? It is when the export markets right themselves, when foreign exchange becomes more stabilized and when the purchasing power of the outside world for American products has been improved. There is no other time, and the bankers very well know it; and if the president does not know it, all the more should they have felt in duty bound to tell him so.

But instead they seem to have fed him with ridiculous slogans like the one quoted. We are accordingly warranted in believing that they went further and advised the president that the more tariff bills he signed, calculated to cripple the buying power of our export markets and stir them to retaliatory action, the sooner the home market will right itself and so right the world.

Nelson Kneass, composer of the melody of "Ben Bolt," did not die unknown to go to an unmarked grave. The Kansas City papers recently reprinted a story from the Detroit News telling of the funeral years ago of a man supposed to be Kneass. In the middle of the ceremony Kneass himself entered the room. The body thought to be his was only an unknown "floater." After the incident Kneass and his wife lived together for a while, but later separated for the second time. After that the world at large lost sight of the composer. But Charles E. Freeman, Miami, Fla., formerly a resident of Chillicothe, Mo., writes that both Kneass and his wife are buried in Chillicothe. The composer died in 1888 while in that city with a theatrical company. Col. W. B. Leach took care of him, while he was ill and buried him, marking the grave with "a slab of granite gray." Souvenir hunters chipped most of the block away, but a few years ago when Mrs. Kneass died her body was taken to Chillicothe and buried beside her husband. Now two new slabs mark the graves.

Raids on twelve saloons were made Wednesday night, but no "goods" were found in any of them.

Yes, farm life is certainly hard on a man and they can't stand it long. There's John S. Shumate, for instance, that the Richmond News says is still actively engaged in farming at the mere age of 89. His son is all the help he has.
